The Politics of Race

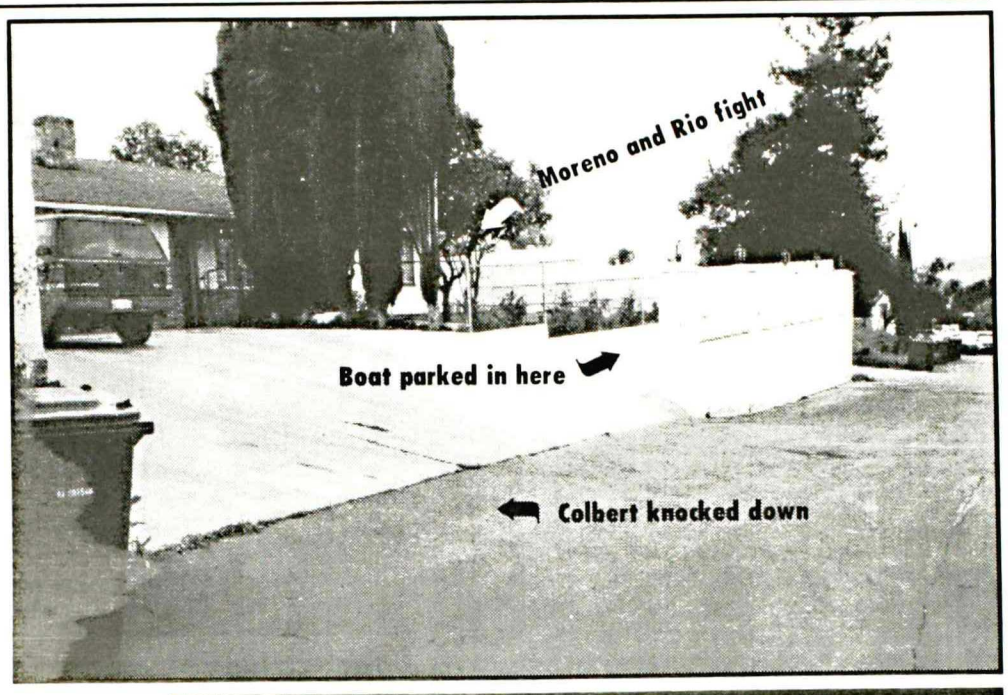
How a drunken brawl became a national hate crime

by Minette Sosa & Steven Saint



The Bullard home on Angila Drive, complete with driveway, inner chain-link fence and outer retaining wall.

It was Memorial Day, the day to remember those who gave their lives in the line of duty. Tim Bullard's parents were out of town and it was the perfect setting to invite a few good friends down from Camp Pendleton for a summer smoker.

Most people drank too much and way too many people crashed the party, held at a usually quiet, dead-end road in southeast Santee. By the end of the night, a scuffle over a guy bumping into a girl became a drunken brawl that would go on to grab national headlines as heinous hate crime.

Few would have heard of the incident at all except for the fact that Lance Corporal Carlos Colbert was paralyzed from the neck down for the rest of his life. Colbert is black, and a story soon emerged that he was beaten because he is black.

Five young men were arrested and charged with everything from conspiracy to aggravated mayhem and torture. Four of them struck a plea-bargain with prosecutors, waiving a lengthy trial and settling for conviction of assault, getting a maximum sentence of one year in county jail and five years of probation.

Jessie Lawson's daughter will be almost 12 years old when he gets out of prison.

One defendant, the only one poor enough to need a public defender, pleaded guilty to assault and a hate crime, and is headed for nine years in prison. Santee Sheriff's detectives won plaques for cracking a crime motivated by race. "60 Minutes" even came to town last week to cover the story.

Despite his plea, Jessie Lawson denies he is a racist and has no recollection of dealing Colbert a crippling blow. His mother is hoping to appeal the sentence.

"Even up to the night before sentencing, Jessie told me he wanted to go to trial because of his innocence," Ruth Lawson said, regretting they had a public defender. "When I look back ... it didn't seem like he was doing his job."

Five days after the party at Bullard's house, Detective George Ward told reporters a black Marine was attacked by a group of skinheads as he was leaving a party on Angila Drive in Santee. The victim, originally from Maryland, may have been hit with brass knuckles and the attackers chanted "white power" over his fallen body, Ward said.

The skinhead version of the story didn't turn out to be true, but it was the working theory for police well into September, when the five defendants were arrested.

The skinhead story actually had its beginnings in the wee hours of Sunday, May 31. According to court records, Lance Cpl. Jaime Bautista pulled his gold Nissan into Camp Pendleton a little after 2 a.m. and unloaded his carful of hungover Marines.

Cpl. Marcus Carter was passed out drunk in the back seat with his bottle of Southern Comfort. Carlos Colbert wasn't doing so well. He kept saying get him to a hospital. Lance Cpl. Jesus Moreno told Bautista that Colbert was whispering he had no feelings in his legs.

Upon arriving at the barracks, Bautista called a medical officer who rushed Colbert away. Bautista was nervous and told the medic Colbert had been jumped by three skinheads outside a liquor store in Oceanside.

Military Policeman John Moore grilled Bautista about the incident around 2:30 in the morning. Bautista was cold sober; after all, he was the designated driver. He said he and Colbert went into the Pend Mart on North Coast Highway for some chips and a Coke. When they came back out, three white males - none of them Marines - made a racial comment towards Colbert.

Bautista said he urged his buddy to ignore the guys, but before he knew it, they had jumped Colbert and were kicking him in the head. Bautista fended them off and drove back to the base for medical help.

Moore left but didn't buy Bautista's story. Colbert was being life-flighted to Scripps Hospital in La Jolla with a broken vertebrae and a concussion, yet Bautista didn't have a scratch on him. None of the MPs at the gates remembered anyone asking for help or driving in a wounded Marine.

In the morning, Moore called Pend Mart, less than a mile south of the base. He discovered the place closed at 11 p.m., three hours before Bautista said he and Colbert went inside for snacks.

> 'Even up to the night before sentencing, Jessie told me he wanted to go to trial because of his innocence.'
> -- Ruth Lawson, mother

Bautista was summoned and handed over to the Oceanside Police for further questioning. He finally broke down and told the detectives he'd lied about the incident. The whole thing happened at a party down in San Diego, at the house of his work buddy, Tim Bullard, down in Santee.

Bautista's new story was similar to the first: upon leaving the party, someone made a racial comment. A beer was thrown at them. Some guys were wearing red baseball caps that read "When in doubt, knock 'em out" on the front and "DAGO MOB" on the back. The Marines found one in the Nissan.

Bullard came to work at Pendleton later that day. He found out Colbert was paralyzed and told his buddies he was concerned about a lawsuit. He and Bautista talked about "getting his story straight," according to Lance Cpl. Aaron Miles' statement to police.

Two days later, on June 2, Bullard called the sheriff's station in Santee to report that the paralyzed Marine had been injured at a party at his house the weekend before. He told authorities that the fight was racially motivated.

Bullard provided detectives with a list of potential witnesses who were interviewed in varying degrees of detail during the summer. Police had their hands full: the Memorial Day melee involved dozens of people too drunk to recall it very clearly later.

One witness described the fight scene as a "mosh pit." Angila Drive has no street lights and between the house and the bottom of the driveway, where Colbert was hit, there was a boat parked next to the four-foot retaining wall.

In police interviews with 22 people, no one (including the victim) saw who hit Colbert. Although there were rumors of brass knuckles at the party, only one witness, defendant Bobby Rio, told police he actually saw them being passed around, and that was after the fight at the house of his next door neighbor, defendant Jed Jones.

The following scenario is confirmed by most of the interviews. At about 11 p.m., the Pendleton Marines were getting in their cars to leave. Jesus Moreno was coming down the driveway and bumped into Amy Gray, then dating Rio. Gray told police Moreno shoved his hand into her face and Rio jumped him in her defense.

Bautista was backing out and noticed Moreno in a fight. Several Marines got out of the car to assist Moreno. Partygoers in the backyard heard about the fight and poured out in the darkness to watch or join in.

Colbert was then seen on the ground with people running and fighting near and around him, stepping on or even tripping over him.

David Trujillo told police he saw Lawson kicking Colbert and stomping him while he lay on the ground. Bullard said Lawson and Rio were shouting "white supremacy, white power" and "Leave the nigger on the ground." Gray confirmed Lawson's presence, but did not implicate Rio, her boyfriend at the time.

When shown photos of various suspects, one of the Marines, Aaron Miles, picked out Trujillo as the person "with the long black hair" standing over Colbert and making racial slurs. Lance Cpl. Randolph Revert picked out Trent Solis as the person who hit and was screaming over Colbert.

Despite the conflicting details, authorities were convinced they could isolate five suspects and move ahead with a hate crime prosecution.

"The reason Jessie Lawson is serving nine years is because three witnesses say they saw him stomping Colbert while he was on the ground." — Deputy D.A. Hector Jimenez

"One of the many problems with the Marines is that they lacked credibility," said Deputy District Attorney Hector Jimenez. "They were drunk, there was a brawl and there were hateful intentions."

On Sept. 24, 1998, sheriffs arrested Jed Jones, Jessie Lawson, Stephen Newark III and Trent Solis. Bobby Rio, who had moved to Ohio, turned himself in the next week.

Det. Ward repeated the story given by Tim Bullard four months earlier: five racists were accused of jumping Colbert because he is black and chanting white-power slogans over his fallen body.

Bullard lives next door to Jones, who is engaged to Newark's sister, Krissy. Bullard thinks of Jones as a nice guy, but a racist: for instance, he was wearing a DAGO MOB ballcap the night of the party.

Jones disagrees. He has no prior juvenile or adult criminal record. He once worked for a black lady, who told his attorney she couldn't believe what Jones was accused of doing.

Jones wrote in a letter to the court: "I attended the party because my neighbor invited me and asked if I would help in case any fights broke out ... I know I will never, ever put myself in that position again."

Jones denies making any racial slurs or remarks prior to the fight. Jones was in the back yard when the melee began and he ran to the front yard. Jones told sheriff's detectives, "I just saw a bunch of elbows flying in the air."

Jones was interviewed at the time of his arrest in September and informed the detectives that after four months, his recollections were a bit unclear. He said that after the fight there were probably racial comments made and attributed them to Rio and Newark.

Newark was arrested even though none of the witnesses placed him anywhere near Colbert. Three witnesses, however, said they heard Newark yelling racist remarks. Several witnesses recalled that Newark had been in a choke-hold and had his face bashed (possibly into a pickup truck).

Newark ran to the side of the house where he soiled his pants and tried to catch his breath, drawing him away from the fight scene. The youngest of the defendants, Newark had gotten into trouble at West Hills High School for making racist comments to another student. He was reprimanded but not expelled.

In recent months, Newark transferred to Santana High, raised his grades, joined the football team and got a job at a grocery store.

"He was going to school and working at night," said his father, Steve Newark.

The sheriffs actually served Solis with a search warrant because two witnesses (who later recanted) claimed that he owned brass knuckles. Police found confederate flags, DAGO MOB attire, weapons and ammunition.

Solis dropped out of high school in the 11th grade to go to work, and lives at his parent's home in Santee. In the probation report, Solis states he drove to Bullard's house by himself, arriving just before 10 p.m.

He paid his cover charge and downed about five beers in a bit more than an hour's time. He was in the back yard when he heard people yelling, "fight, fight!" He ran to the front and got involved.

Solis said that first he was fighting a Mexican guy, then he got hit on the head and turned around to punch the guy, realizing it was Jed Jones. Solis said it was so dark that it was almost impossible to tell whom was hitting whom, or what was going on.

Rio had, so far, never been in trouble with the law. He graduated from West Hills High School in 1994, was involved in sports and dated a Mexican girl. Rio was the last of the five to be arrested, returning from Ohio where he was living with his sister in hopes of getting a firefighting job.

He went to the Santee Sheriff's Department and surrendered. His family quickly hired an attorney to represent him and, therefore, he made no statements to police as did the other defendants.

Rio was represented by Christopher Plourd during the preliminary hearing. Plourd contends that his client was under the influence of alcohol and was, to some degree, provoked because of the assault on his girlfriend by a Marine.

Rio remembers the fight starting because Gray was assaulted by Moreno, who struck the first blow. Rio fell to the ground and grabbed Moreno by the knees. From there, the fight escalated but Rio was on the ground and could not see what else was going on.

He saw David Trujillo fighting in the group and Trujillo helped Rio up. Rio also remembers seeing Colbert fighting, but did not see him go down because Rio was farther up in the driveway.

Of all the witnesses, Rio is the only person to admit to having seen brass knuckles after the fight, but said he didn't know who owned them.

Lawson has no tattoos or attire to indicate he has supremacist beliefs, nor did police have a search warrant for his home on the morning of the arrests.

He did not plead guilty to a hate crime because he admits he wielded brass knuckles or has white supremacist views. He was not, however, offered the one-year-on-assault deal that the others were in January.

The probation report included in Jessie Lawson's court documents indicates he would not be considered for probation, which set him apart from the others. He has two alcohol-related blots on his record: a reckless driving charge from New Year's Eve, 1997 (blood alcohol level at .09), and a drunk driving ticket from July, 1998, still pending.

As with the other defendants, the probation officer's report concludes that racism does not appear to be the precipitating cause of the Memorial Day fight. Lawson was inclined to let the trial begin, but public defender Ron Bobo reasoned he would face a pretty risky situation if Lawson was the sole defendant.

"The reason Jessie Lawson is serving nine years is because three witnesses say they saw him stomping on Colbert while he was on the ground," said Deputy District Attorney Hector Jimenez. "Others identified Lawson as the one screaming 'White Power.'" One of these witnesses was Amy Gray, whom Bobo said he suspects could be shifting blame from her former boyfriend, Rio. The others were called "confidential informants," withholding their names for fear of reprisal.

Ruth Lawson said her son agreed to plead guilty because he was scared.

"All he kept thinking about was not seeing his 2-year-old daughter," she said.

Ruth said Lawson told her he's prepared to join the white supremacists in prison in order to survive. She and the other families have filed a complaint with Internal Affairs about the way the investigation was handled, particularly by the detectives at the Santee station.

"Why?" asked Bobby's father, Frank Rio. "Why were these five boys picked out of a group of dozens who were fighting?"

Jed Jones' attorney, John Phillips, criticized the District Attorney's office for "trying to paint with a broad brush and tarnish all the defendants with the same brush." Jones said the racist stigma will follow him for a long time to come.

Prosecutors are happy the case is over, nervous about the number of witnesses recanting statements or admitting to repeating hearsay. The hate crime remains intact.

"This crime was motivated in whole or in part because of Colbert's race," Jimenez said. "Colbert is an extreme, but real, example of what happens when intolerance goes unchecked. How about the next Carlos Colbert incident?"

Colbert is now living on the East Coast. Bautista, Moreno and the other Marines continue their jobs at Pendleton, with the exception of Marcus Carter, who was honorably discharged last November, and Tim Bullard, who left the Marines early, also with an honorable discharge.

Challenge Center moves its facilities to La Mesa

by Greg Eichelberger

After 11 years in El Cajon, the Challenge Center moved to a refurbished building in La Mesa's Sunset Park.

Challenge Center is a facility where the long-term physically disabled can receive maintenance therapy. Dozens of people, including El Cajon and La Mesa mayors Mark Lewis and Art Madrid and Barona Tribal Chairman Clifford La Chappa braved to chilly morning to show up at the ribbon-cutting ceremony last Saturday.

The edifice, which was once part of the San Diego Chargers training complex, now houses dozens of exercise machines, support harnesses and other equipment designed to provide those who have exhausted their insurance with continuing rehabilitation.

Without this ongoing therapy, they could begin going downhill, both physically and self-image-wise. Adaptive physical instructors are also on hand to assist in this process.

"For the most part, we're not talking about rehabilitating someone who has suffered a spinal injury or stroke," said center founder Bill Bodry, who was paralyzed from the waist down after spinal surgery. "We provide a regular program of exercises and stretching to prevent secondary complications of the primary disability that commonly occurs when someone suddenly becomes sedentary, such as pressure sores, loss of muscle mass, and so on."

He went on to explain that it's just as important to prevent a secondary injury (bone fractures that might occur because of loss of balance or weakness in a limb, for instance) as it is to treat the main problem.

Since moving into the new building, attendance has jumped from 50 clients a day to over 90, and no one is turned away. Cost per person is only $30 a month, and many visit two and three times a week.

To supplement the cost, the center is supported by a grant from the city of La Mesa, major corporate donors (the Ackerman Foundation, Callaway Golf, and the Grossmont Health Care District, Barona Casino, among others), as well as individual contributors and patrons (including former Oakland Raider Ben Davidson who sits on the Board of Directors). For more information on the center, call 667-8644.

A non-response response

Lemon Grove's mayor is so AWOL on the facts and matters that lead up to the necessity of needing to appoint a interim city manager that she sought advice and direction from "Chicken Little".

I am ashamed of her for failing on issues and leading a full war battle ad hominem attack against her fellow council colleague. I will paraphrase with emphasis our great statesman James Madison from the Federalist Papers. I shall not "permit that sacred knot which binds the people of America [Lemon Grove] together to be severed or dissolved by ambition or by avarice, by jealousy or by misrepresentation".

Therefore I will not lower myself to respond to Lemon Grove's Mayor Sessom's "M is for ... " column.

COUNCILMEMBER CRAIG LAKE

Attack displayed bad manners by mayor

Mayor Sessom's attack on Councilman Lake in last week's Lemon Grove Review was a public display of bad manners. Such an attack is generally self-destructive and always bad politics. Bad politicians make bad politics.

Councilman Lake has demonstrated a long record of support for measures of valve for Lemon Grove and a history of voting against projects and expenditures inherently and/or too expensive for the Lemon Grove treasury. His concerns for the good and welfare of Lemon Grove is accepted by all who are aware of the goings on at City Hall.

At the public library I plan to research the minutes of the council meetings where Councilman Lake voted (1) against (4) to see how valid the mayor's clam that his (1) vote was bad for the city.

Next week (if the Review has space for a letter from me), I'll present my findings.

LEO BODIN

Richardson for city manager

Robert J. Richardson, assistant city manager, was chosen to succeed Doug Yount. Now, that makes sense!

Why should a man who has been able to prove his worth over three years not be promoted to the senior position? Of course he should!

As for the city council searching for a city manager — the council should be searching for another possible worthy assistant manager who can also prove his ability while Mr. Richardson is continuing to serve our city.

Stumbling around in other cities looking for qualified potential city employees does not make sense when many highly qualified Lemon Grove citizens are able and ready to serve our city.

Lemon Twist

Out, out with you!

by Cheryl Cohen

Okay, now that I've performed the political "outing" of Mary "Boom-Boom" England, it's only fair that the same is offered to the rest of any of you out there with aspirations to run for local office. Too wishy-washy to belly up to the bar and admit it? Think you can just hem and haw, stay on the fence and keep us guessing? Well, think again! We've got a life to lead here, Cha-Cha! How we gonna know who to vote against if everyone doesn't come out to play? Get outta the closet and sing along with whatever inane campaign tune I invent – just for you! And, it's FREE – for now, anyway.

Still a little cheezed off about the $7,000 1997 city of Lemon Grove Christmas yacht party? You might be happy to know that in 1998 things were different. No yacht, no bonuses, not even Christmas gifts to staff (if you don't count those three and a half paid days off because of the construction work on the counter). Just a little impromptu Christmas party given by Councilman Tom Clabby and wife Dona, with a contribution for food and some outdoor heaters by the city. What? Didn't know about it? Don't feel alone, neither did Councilman Craig Lake. But if you're thinking that perhaps the party wasn't properly noticed (to use some council meeting jargon), that's not true. Your Lovely mayor, Mme. M. said there were flyers posted at City Hall about the event. I'm sure they meant to tell Mr. Lake that they were posted in the ladies room ...

Say, ever wonder how to build a team? Well, you start by feeding them, for one thing. The Marine Room is a good place to start, wouldn't you say? I guess that's what former city manager Doug Yount thought too, when he decided to host a Team Building Activity last December for the city's managers or department heads. That would include Bob Richardson, Christine Taub, "Dapper" Chuck Stuck, Linda Niles, Yolanda Collins, Nancy McCadam and Kevin Eggleston. A nice little lunch with a view of waves crashing against the shore would be the ideal location for such an "activity", if you don't concentrate on the "crashing" part. And, as a little remembrance of the event, to give to said managers – ...pens. Pens from Tiffany's. Sterling silver pens from Tiffany's. Oh, details, details. Let's just call them $90 pens and get it over with. Now, if that didn't take the sting outta getting no Christmas bonuses, I don't know what would.

Hey, don't complain! You know that had to cost lots less than another yacht party! Ol' Douggie was looking out for you, the Lemon Grove taxpayer. His timing may not have been all that hot, but you sure can't bitch about his taste. And just think of how resourceful it was of him to improvise like that in the face of Christmas austerity measures!

Has anyone noticed the startingly-ugly, yellow and black blindingly-lit billboard off of Hwy. 94 as you're entering Lemon Grove? I was more than a little alarmed at first, thinking it was the sign that College Ford plans to put in. With all that yellow, who would be able to see the lemon on the city flag which they promise to fly high atop the 60-foot flagpole they're going to install? Thank goodness, it was only a sign by Ditek funding, letting us all know what a lousy interest rate we're locked into compared to theirs.

So what's the holdup with the College Ford sign, anyway? I keep waiting for the implementation of Mile O' Cars II so that we can be reminded of the interest rate we're locked into on the clunkers we're driving as we pass by. Oh, sure, Bobby Baker Toyota is a good reminder, too - but once their sign is combined with Ditek's and College Ford's, just think of how much stronger the effect will be.

Want to know how Amorita Treganza stays so young? Here's your chance to find out at a special program called, "Lemon Grove's Remarkable Women." This is one you're not going to want to miss. Fay Fisher Dalton, Arleen Dodson and Amorita "thoroughly modern" Treganza will be on display as the panelists for a very special presentation, moderated by none other than our own Helen Ofield. There will be refreshments, a photo exhibit and ... those remarkable women. It's all a part of Women's History Month from 2 – 4 p.m. next Wednesday at the Lemon Grove Library at 8073 Broadway. If you think you could be a remarkable Lemon Grove woman, come on down and get some tips from some real pioneers (with great jewelry) who make the rest of us look like neophyte wimps.

Why not get out your own pen and jot down something to send to the Review today? Or, you can get it directly to me at 619-264-3153 (Msg.), 264-4180 (fax), or e-mail me at cirious@cts.com. Whether you use a Bic or Mont Blanc, we'll make sure it all goes down in infamy.

Dealing with it

by Phillip Giannangeli

Taxes due. Kids need braces. Computer crashed. Bills piling up. So out of shape. Dog to vet for vaccination. Cut sidewalk trees before lawsuit by unlucky pedestrian. Send out invitations for party. PTA, SPCA, IRA. Yikes!

Stressed out? Lots of folks seem to be these days. From kids to grandparents and all those between, the most common complaint these days is stress. The news magazines front-page it, local TV news programs do features and even signs inviting worshippers to church services pay homage to stress. I think we have a national mania here and Forum Publications has the journalistic responsibility to jump into this puddle and effect a rescue or at least try to make sense of it. Splash.

CNN has a daily news program for students. It tries to put the day's news into the language and graphics young people understand and will stay tuned in for.

Last week, there was a segment on stress. It showed younger children in school (elementary grades) struggling with several hours of homework each week while doing the usual sports, lessons, and family stuff.

Kids had almost no time for being kids. One little girl said she just wanted to have some time to relax and not have to do anything. Poor little girl sounded like a real candidate for a stress diagnosis.

CNN wasn't alone. Time Magazine (Jan. 25) did an issue on "Too Much Homework! How it's hurting our kids ..." Page after page of kids and parents trying to deal with the stress caused by homework. One feature "The Homework Ate My Family" lays out the ultimate in a stress related outcome.

This desire to have and do it all is doing us in. Busy grabbing all the gusto we can get our hands on, we're pushing the stress-o-meter into the danger zone. From those going postal to those falling back to prenatal, we are doing damage to ourselves. Even some of our stress reduction solutions backfire. Trying to get away from our day to day stress by going on a fun-filled vacation can lead to as much stress as we're trying to get away from. A word on that and other stressers.

Dr. Nicholas Christenfeld — he of the study I wrote about several months ago dealing with one's initials and how they could be related to health and longevity. GOD, good; CAD, bad — found that some people who visit New York City on vacation have a tendency to die there. Twenty-four percent there as compared with only 18 percent here in San Diego.

He didn't say so, but my guess is that many of the victims who died here probably had smiles on their faces enjoying the many attractions of our area while those departing the world from New York City likely had looks of terror on their faces experiencing the many aggravations of that area. Running away form stress apparently doesn't help a lot of us. On to another stress inducer. Coffee.

Not really coffee, but the caffeine in coffee. Drink four cups or more a day and you're priming the stress pump. Reduce the number of cups, and you reduce the stress level some, but like New York City, coffee is not particularly good for you.

Some stressers that we all face don't get studied but they are out there. I'm sure you're aware of them. The rude clerk, the know-it-all colleague, the imperial boss who couldn't open a bag of chips without help, the neighbor who aims for you when driving down the street, and the won't-take-no-for-an-answer salesman that comes a calling. These and other stresses are what we all face all the time. We just have to learn to deal with them or they will get the best of us.

Here at Forum, we deal with the stress of getting the papers out on time by saying things about our editor behind his back. How do you handle stress in your life?

Reel Thoughts

Is this sequel really necessary?

by Betty Jo Tucker

If moviegoers were asked to name their favorite horror movie, many would choose "Carrie," even though it was made over 20 years ago.

Based on Stephen King's first novel, this stylistic 1976 film wowed audiences and critics alike with its graphic depiction of a telekinetic, revenge-seeking young girl's rampage after suffering a well-planned public humiliation.

Terrifying images of Carrie White's bloody prom night may still haunt some viewers' dreams.

Directed by Brian De Palma, "Carrie" featured Oscar-nominated performances by Sissy Spacek in the title role and Piper Laurie as her religious fanatic mother. An intense young actor named John Travolta also added his talent to the entertaining mix.

With its superb character development and outstanding production values, "Carrie" earned a reputation as the ultimate teenage revenge movie.

It makes most other films of this genre (including "Scream" and "I Know What You Did Last Summer") look like "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm."

Now, in MGM's "The Rage: Carrie 2," Rachel (Emily Bergyl), another telekinetic high school student, faces torment from the in-crowd.

Emily Bergl plays Rachel, stalking her tormentors Carrie-style in United Artists' ridiculous supernatural thriller, "The Rage: Carrie 2."

Devastated by the suicide of her best friend, Rachel feels more and more like an outsider. A handsome young man (Jason London ) seems fond of her, but he is a member of the popular group that likes to make life miserable for outsiders.

When Rachel becomes the target of a malicious trap, her anger could prove as destructive as Carrie White's.

You'll never guess who's around to help Rachel through these difficulties. None other than Sue Snell (Amy Irving), the only survivor of Carrie's rampage 22 years ago. Quite a coincidence, right?

Just wait, there's more. Irving ("Crossing Delancy") made her movie debut playing this same character in "Carrie."

"The Rage," like "Carrie," reminds viewers how wrong it is to degrade or make fun of others. But does the sequel generate as many thrills and chills as its classic forerunner? Afraid not.

Without Spacek, Laurie, De Palma and King, this new flick is just another run-of-the-mill scaretest.

So, why settle for a finger painting instead of a Rembrandt? Check out "Carrie" at your favorite video store.

(WARNING: Because both films include disturbing scenes of gore and violence, neither should be viewed by children or by the squeamish of any age.)

Rare agreements

by Greg Eichelberger

For the past two years, I have been making no bones about my disagreement with many of the choices made by the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences over the past seven decades. However, I am not without flexibility, and, in honor of the new spirit of co-operation sweeping the Congress, I will now give examples in which I actually agree with the Academy. It wasn't easy, but I managed to do it, so here goes:

1929 - 30. "All Quiet On The Western Front" – Not the first anti-war film, but certainly one of the best, director Lewis Milestone took Erich Maria Remarque's novel about German soldiers fighting in France during World War I, and created a timeless classic.

The horrors of trench warfare, pitiful waste, and a lost generation who sacrificed themselves on an alter of egomaniacal leaders and business interests, is brought to life. Battle scenes were so authentic that they were later used in later movies and even documentaries about the conflict.

1943. "Casablanca" – During voting for this particular year, the little Warner Brothers movie based on the play, "Everyone Comes To Ricks," didn't stand a chance against such heavyweight competition as "The Song Of Bernadette," "In Which We Serve," "Madame Curie" and "For Whom the Bell Tolls," but when the dust had settled, "Casablanca" had won. A great choice with Bogart, Bergman, Lorre, Rains, Greenstreet and pianist Dooley Wilson ("Play it, Sam") all excellent. Decision is even more amazing when just two years earlier, the same voters mixed the chances of "Citizen Kane," one of the greatest films of all-time, in this same category.

1955. "Marty" – a sweet little movie based on Paddy Chayefsky's teleplay, with screen bad guy, Ernest Borgnine ("From Here To Eternity") as a Bronx butcher looking for love, walked away with the brass ring in 1955. Best Picture, director (Delbert Mann), actor, and screenplay honors went to this low-budget, black-and-white marvel going up against such Technicolor box-office monsters as "Love Is a Many-Splendored Thing," "Picnic" and "Mister Roberts."

1961. "West Side Story" – Only one of only a handful of musicals that I even thought deserved to be nominated ("Meet Me In St. Louis," "Oliver!," "Singing In The Rain," "A Hard Day's Night" among them), I would give this film the award every time. Who doesn't know the lyrics to "The Jet Song," "Maria," "Gee, Officer Krupke," "Tonight" or "I Feel Pretty"? Based on "Romeo & Juliet," it is still one of my favorite late-night flicks. The acting, especially Rita Moreno and Natalie Wood, ain't bad, either.

1966. "A Man For All Seasons" - while some critics were upset that Mike Nichols' depressing "Who's Afraid Of Virginia Woolf?" didn't win (although it garnered Best Actress and Supporting Actress nods), I went along with the voters here and gave it to Fred Zinneman's story of Sir Thomas More. With Oscar-winner Paul Scofield ("Quiz Show") in the lead reading Robert Bolt's literate script, the oft-told tale of someone standing up for their principles, is given new life. Great support work from Robert Shaw ("Jaws") as Henry VIII.

1968. "Oliver!" – okay, I'm a sucker for this splendid, big-budget musical adaptation of Dickens' "Oliver Twist". The songs ("Food, Glorious Food," "Boy for Sale, "Consider Yourself," "I'd Do Anything," among others) are great, the story timeless, and the acting, especially Ron Moody (Fagen), Oliver Reed (Bill Sykes), Mark Lester (in the title role), and Jack Wilde (The Artful Dodger) is top-notch. it beat out "Funny Girl," "The Lion In Winter," "2001: A Space Odyssey," and "Romeo & Juliet" to take the Best Picture trophy.

1972. "The Godfather" – despite some tough challenges from "Deliverance" and "Cabaret," it's difficult not to give the '72 award to Francis Ford Copolla's filming of the Mario Puzzo novel about a fictional Mafia family in the mid-1940s. Minutely-detailed with excellent performances by Marlon Brando, Al Pacino, James Caan, Robert Duvall and Talia Shire, I still love the horse's head in the movie producer's bed scene and the toll booth sequence.

1979. "Kramer vs. Kramer" – Dustin Hoffman finally won a Best Actor award (he'd been nominated four previous times) as a father who's forced to raises his 7-year old son in Robert Benton's tear-jerking custody-battle film. Defeating such heavyweights as "All That Jazz," "Apocalypse Now," and "Norma Rae," this drama also gave Meryl Streep, who's character leaves her husband and little boy to "find herself," the first of two statuettes she would earn so far.

1984. "Amadeus" – Milos Forman took his second Best Director Oscar (he'd won in 1975 for "One Flew Over The Cuckoo's Nest") for bringing Peter Schafer's story of the often ribald and immature side of composer Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart to life. Lavish, intelligent and entertaining picture took home eight awards in all, including Best Actor (F. Murray Abraham), screenplay, costume design and art and set decoration, among others.

1997. "Titanic" – I could have gone with a great comedy ("As Good As It Gets"), or a thrilling film noir ("L.A. Confidential"), but I went with the Academy on their choice of the doomed liner that went to the bottom of the sea over 85 years ago. No acting standouts to speak of (other than Gloria Stuart, who should have won the Best Supporting Actress award), but the compelling story, awesome special effects and non-stop action not only made it the all-time box office champ, but also allowed it to sweep the ceremonies with 11 trophies, tying 1959's "Ben-Hur" for place in that category, as well. James Cameron, best known for directing Arnold Schwartzenegger's "Terminator" and "True Lies," claimed one of those 11 prizes.

So, you see, I can adapt and agree (sometimes) with the Academy. It doesn't happen often, but it does happen. Now, if "Saving Private Ryan" can win next week, you can add another one to this list.
